over the baker, burning his feet and head badly and half blinding him. He tried to get out of the basement by the front door, but the smoke and fire the tried to get out of the basement by the front door, but the smoke and fire blocked the way. In the rear the place was burning, too, so Schodt got down on his hands and knees and crept up through a ventilator opening into a rear court-yard.

In the mean time the smoke had poured into the house, and the alarm of fire had aroused the fifteen families in the rooms above.

There are no fire-escapes on the front of the house and those in the rear overlook the little court-yard into which the burned baker had crept. A crowded rear tenement has its only outlet into this court-yard also.

Five minutes after the first cry of fire had been raised the yard was tilled with frightened, half-dressed persons, who struggled to get through the marrow, smoke-filled front hall into the street. The hall became blocked, and the tumult in the yard became greater, when some of the inmates of the houses front and rear began to throw their effects from the windows.

Before the engines arrived the reserves from the East Fifth street station had been called out, and succeeded in quieting the frightened tenants and getting them from the courtyar! to the street without injury. The baker was carried into the street and his injuries cared for. The flames were contined to the basement, and only $150 dafnage was done. It was some time after the flames had been extinguished before the tenants could be persuaded to return to their rooms. It was only when one woman, who had come out with her pet vat inher arms, remembered that one of her children had been left behind, and rushed to her rooms to get it, that the others considered it would be safe to return. The child was found sleeping in a cradie.
